

Discrimination and Harassment Student Advisers Program

As part of the university's commitment to social inclusion in higher education, Monash strives to uphold the principles of equal opportunity and promote employment, education and service delivery in accordance with universal principles of equity, fairness and social justice.

The university's Equal Opportunity Policy provides the Monash community with a working and learning environment free from all forms of unlawful discrimination, harassment, vilification and victimisation.

The position of a Discrimination and Harassment Student Adviser is an attractive professional development opportunity for any student interested in human resources or workplace management, anti-discrimination law, conciliation or mediation.

Successful candidates will be placed in the advantageous role of working alongside the Equity and Diversity Centre, as well as gaining training and skills that are transferable to many organisations, such as equal opportunity, human resources management and industrial relations law.

The position places student advisers with mentors, as well as in a position to gain real-world experience, working on cases both with Staff Advisers and autonomously.

Please note that the position is of a voluntary nature, with all training and mentoring benefits provided free of charge.

To lodge your interest, or for more information please contact Leah Zaks at the Equity and Diversity Centre at leah.zaks@monash.edu
